CONTINUOUS SERVICE SINCE 1894

Scouts refurbish farm equipment

By Kimberly Heinrichs

About 15 Upland Boy Scouts are spending their Saturday mornings refurbishing farm equipment older than they are.

The groves are gone now, replaced by the very north Upland homes in which the members of Troop 623 live.

"You're looking at the history of Upland, really, of the groves," said Brian Smith, the Upland High School sophomore who is supervising the others in repairing a pre-World War II Caterpillar tractor and two carts in order to earn his Eagle Scout rank.

The equipment has been rotting and rusting for many years. It has spent the last few years in a shed behind the Chaffey Communities Cultural Center on 15th Street. Two scout troops have done yard work, but none have ever ventured into the shed, said Bea Riggs, director of the center, which relies on volunteers as its lifeblood.

Smith said City Manager Lee Travers suggested the project and the Upland Rotary Club financed it with $133 for paint, painting supplies and sandpaper.

It will take 250 hours of work to sand the old yellow tractor, re-paint it and to smooth out the rough edges of the wooden carts and apply water sealer, he said.

One of the carts was used to haul fruit during the days of the groves and the other was used to carry luggage from the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railroad depots in Ontario to the Hotel Royal,

Dedication spurs team's tall order to defend title

Etiwanda drill squad plans to fly high again

By Mike Krapfl

The 11 young women that comprise the Etiwanda tall flags drill team had 225 push-ups worth of determination during a recent three-hour workout.

It's that determination, they say, that's going to successfully defend their world drill-team title in Tokyo this summer.

"Our motto is dedication, not reputation," Shannon

Ventor, the team's captain, said during a brief break in a workout last week.

"Besides," team member Jennifer McCready said "there's only four of us with reputations."

Only four of the current team members, she explained, were members of last year's world which burned down in 1925, according to museum volunteer Alberta Schaefer.

The scouts have also prepared a concrete platform on which to mount an old hand-powered gasoline pump.

They earn community service hours toward a higher Scout rank for their trouble, although that isn't the only reason they're doing it. For one thing, working on the equipment with his friends is fun, said sixth-grader Matt Lopatka.

But he still had another reason for volunteering.

"My mom sort of pushed me into it," he said. □

Hubbs works like dog but may lose city job

By Mike Krapfl

Hubbs grew up homeless. He was lucky, however, and found shelter and employment one month ago in the new Rancho Cucamonga City Yard on Ninth Street.

Although littered with Hubbs' favorite food, his small house near the yard's gate seems comfortable.

The house also affords the cream-colored, mixed breed puppy a clear view of any intruders who might try to pillage the yard of its $1 million stockpile of shovels, rakes, tractors, mowers and trucks.

Monte Prescher, Rancho Cucamonga's public works engineer, assessed Hubbs' job performance last week by saying, "he's a barking alarm and we're lucky to have him."

Hubbs' luck, however, may be running out.

The stocky animal — he's named after Rancho Cucamonga's former City Engineer Lloyd Hubbs, an equally stocky man who used to talk about looking for a "junk-yard dog" for the city yard — was to go before the City Council this week.

The council was to decide whether or not Hubbs has a future home in the city's yard.

The council was scheduled to make that decision before, but delayed when Councilman Chuck Buquet asked the city attorney to investigate the city's liability in the event Hubbs bites an intruder.

City Attorney Jim Markman will be meeting with Prescher and other city officials today to discuss Hubbs' fate.

In the event the adopted stray is turned away from the city yard, "we'll find another home for him. We won't take him to the pound or anything like that," City Engineer Russell Maguire said.

"But we want to keep him," Maguire said. "He's really more of a mascot than anything and we like having him around."

Hubbs, according to Prescher, won't be a cost to the city.

The 30 or so people who work out of the yard have paid for Hubbs' food and shelter, Prescher explained while the dog bounced about the yard.

Later, while he looked toward the finally resting pup, Prescher said he hoped the city's liability for the dog can be worked out.

"That's the problem with picking up a stray," he said. "You may not know if you can keep it, but before long you sure want to."

champion team.

Despite being a team of rookies, it was undefeated during its outdoor season last fall and eventually earned Southern California's championship.

Add that success to the team's dedication and its 15 to 20 hour a week practice schedule, "and I'm 100 percent sure we can successfully defend our world title," Venter said.

To do that, though, the team has to raise $14,000 worth of airfare for its July trip to Tokyo.

So, the members have added some fund-raising exhibition performances to their already-busy schedule.

The team will perform April 4 at the Miss Rancho Cucamonga Pageant,

Year-old feud isn't likely to end with firm's shutdown

By Mike Krapf

A running feud between a disgruntled Rancho Cucamonga businessman and the city wasn't likely to end Sunday when Ed Jaunzemis closed his business' doors.

Jaunzemis and the city's officials have fought for more than a year over his Foothill Boulevard business, The Old Cucamonga Glass Station.

As a result, a court has ordered Jaunzemis to vacate the business or risk 30 days in jail.

Despite the ruling, Jaunzemis insists his business is appropriate for the location.

And he claims the city has nonetheless tried to keep him out of business by maliciously enforcing building and property codes covering the gas station he has converted to a full-service glass showroom and workshop.

City officials say they are only doing their job and being fair to all the other businesses in the community which abide by the city's rules.

The city, therefore, took See FEUD/Page 5

Jaunzemis to court in December for not getting proper approval to operate his business.

A West Valley Municipal Court judge ruled in the city's favor and ordered Jaunzemis to vacate the building.

Although Jaunzemis says he'll vacate the building by the deadline, he adds he doesn't want to leave it permanently.

He therefore filed papers two weeks ago to go before the city's Planning Commission to try to win its approval of his business at the location.

That's something he should have done a year ago when he illegally opened his business, city officials say.

"None of this was my fault," Jaunzemis said of his feud with the city. "I didn't know what the city was going to require — I just wanted to open a business."

Jaunzemis stood outside his busy shop and blamed the city for failing to communicate its requirements, thereby forcing him to fight for his business.

Brad Buller, Rancho Cucamonga's city planner, said Jaunzemis' problems with the city aren't a matter of communication.

"We have tried to make everything clear to him," Buller said. "We have literally spent hours walking him through the application procedures."

The process of establishing a business within the city can be confusing and even arduous, Buller admitted.

When asked how a person could avoid the red tape that has plagued Jaunzemis and his business, City Manager Lauren Wasserman said, "Come in and talk to the staff."

"If there are hardships," he said, "we'll try to work something out."

Jaunzemis, meanwhile, was not to be placated.

"I feel like a mouse in a milk carton," he said. "I'm trapped in a legal world I don't understand."

H.O.T. Tips

(House of Tools)

To bandsaw multiples of intricate wooden-toy parts, you can stack several blanks together with double sided tape between. The tape holds firm while bandsawing, drilling and edge-sanding operations. Double-sided tape eliminates nail holes, replaces awkward clamps and reduces layout time (lines need be drawn only once). Parts are easily separated by inserting a chisel into the tape joint and tapping lightly. If your bandsaw wheels are out of balance, try wrapping solder around the spokes where needed.

A common technique for attaching a turning blank to a faceplate to avoid screw holes is to glue the blank to a waste board with paper in between. The method works well, but the long curing time of the glue is inconvenient.

I have found that a hot-melt glue gun will attach the blank to the waste board rapidly and securely. The glue sets in seconds, so no clamps are needed—just hand pressure. No paper is needed because the glue bond can be easily broken later with a chisel. Since the glue doesn't become hard, clean up of the bottom of the turning is easy.

Upland to have its own July 4 fireworks show

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Upland residents will be able to attend a Fourth of July fireworks show without leaving town this year.

"It's something new and it's kind of exciting doing something like that for the first time. It's also kind of scary," said Recreation Director Larry Thornburg, who recently got City Council permission for the project.

Although it is a large project, the director said he thinks the city is ready to support a fireworks celebration.

Thornburg said he was inspired when he attended Claremont's fireworks display last summer and saw many Upland residents there.

"We're banking on the fact that there are a lot of people who go to other fireworks shows because we don't have one," he said.

Thornburg said the display will be held in Upland High School's stadium. Preliminary plans have the program beginning at 6 p.m. with miscellaneous entertainment until an 8:15 stage show with singing and dancing.

When it comes to the fireworks, viewers will get more than the usual show, Thornburg promised, they'll get a "sky concert." Recorded music will be played in conjunction with the show, he said.

"It has a little more pizzazz to it than just shooting off the fireworks," he said.

The city is working on an agreement with Pyro Spectaculars of Rialto now and the total project should cost between $18,000 and $20,000, he said. But all of that will be made up with admission fees and will cost the taxpayers nothing, Thornburg said.

Fire agencies stressed by construction boom

By David Silver

Local fire agencies are finding it hard to keep up with the construction boom in the West Valley.

It has meant more work for fire departments that don't have enough stations, equipment and manpower.

"Right now we are stretched to the maximum," said Capt. B. Alexander of the Ontario Fire Department.

"As more structures are built you are going to have more fires and it's a struggle to keep up with it," he said.

There are currently six fire stations in Ontario and 100 fireman to handle all emergencies.

Alexander hopes to add another fire station within the next year.

"We hope to have one under construction within the next six months. Then maybe a seventh and eighth."

The additional fire stations will help his staff lower its "run times."

This is the amount of time that it takes to get from a station to an emergency or fire.

It presently takes an average of 8 to 10 minutes to get to a fire, but it should take no longer than 5 minutes, Alexander said.

"We need two or three new stations so we can lower the response time."

The need to keep up with its explosive growth has Rancho Cucamonga looking to build at least one more fire station.

It is one of the fastest-growing cities in the West Valley and although the Foothill Fire Protection District is meeting the demands placed on it for fire protection it's a struggle, said Fire Chief Dennis Michael.

"Because of the rapid growth of Rancho Cucamonga we're playing catch up. We hope to catch up in five years," he said.

That would include an extra fire station and nine people to bolster the current three fire stations and 42-member staff.

"By the time we build the new fire station in two years, we'll be one behind, because of the growth," he said.

There is a positive side to all of the growth for firefighters, said Ed Seits, deputy director of the State Fire Marshal's Office in Sacramento.

"The newer buildings will have the latest fire protection system, because it's built according to the latest building and fire codes," Seits said.

But keeping up with the new construction so a check can be made is difficult.

"The administrative people who look at plans for new buildings are so overloaded because there aren't enough personnel to handle it," said Capt. Jerry Gomez of the Montclair Fire Department.

Chaffey Union High School class of 1937 is having a reunion Oct. 3 at the Red Hill Country Club in Rancho Cucamonga.

Chino High School

The Chino High School class of 1977 is having a reunion June 20 at the Clarion Hotel in Ontario.

Chino High '77

The Chino High School class of 1977 is having a 10-year reunion June 20 at the Clarion Hotel in Ontario.

Any graduates wanting more information about the event or who haven't been contacted, can call 627-4740.

563rd battalion

A reunion is being planned for members of the 563rd Signal Air Warning Battalion who saw service in Europe during World War II.

Members may contact Emory R. Sweigard, 1044 Lingleston Rd., Harrisburg, Pa., 17110.

Those interested in the reunion also may call (717) 236-5419 for more information.

Montclair has two fire stations and 40 firefighters for a city of 28,000 and some unincorporated areas.

"With the addition (to) the Montclair Plaza we've been understaffed. We need more manpower," Gomez said.

He also said emergency preparedness is a new area that needs more planning.

"We should be prepared for earthquakes and other disasters."

It's potential disasters like these that have Peter Malone worried.

"I only have one man covering the entire Inland Empire."

He heads the State Fire Marshal's Southern California office that handles 12 counties with a staff of 24.

"We don't have enough manpower or time to check out all of these new buildings. This worries me," he said.

His staff checks places where the public gathers.

"The major problem is the vastness of the area. We really only scratch the surface," he said.

The vastness of the area also has a Chino Fire District official worried.

"We cover the city of Chino and 90 square miles of unincorporated areas of San Bernardino County. If we have more than a few fires at a time we'll have problems," said Tom Maxham, battalion commander of the Chino Fire District.

For a city of 90,000, Chino has five stations and 57 firefighters.

"Businesses have increased and have put a strain on us. The problem is we need more stations and money to build them. Taxpayers' money will not be enough," he said.

Alexander also agrees that building new fire stations would solve a lot of problems, "but it's a matter of economics," he said.

Buffalo Bill Cody hasn't been forgotten

By Suzanne Sproul

Jack Fletcher believes in heroes.

"When a people forget their heroes and history, then there's something really wrong," said the Upland man who established the Fletcher Foundation in Nebraska to preserve the memory of Indians and Backtrailing Buffalo Bill Cody, his latest organization he founded to help promote the spirit of Buffalo Bill Cody.

Research has been concentrated in Iowa, where Cody was born; Kansas, where he picked up his nickname; Nebraska, where he found the "Wild West"; Wyoming, where he later owned a ranch and a town was named after him; and Colorado, where he is buried on top of Lookout Mountain.

"I don't want to get on a soap box about Cody, but I think he was a symbol of one of the most dramatic periods in our history. He was one of America's greatest goodwill ambassadors when he traveled throughout this country and Europe," Fletcher said.

Cody visited 1,182 cities in America and Europe, including San Bernardino in 1908 and Pomona in 1914. To promote interest, Fletcher or organization members try to visit as many spots where the famed cowboy performed as possible.

Backtrailing, which Fletcher started in 1980 out of his Upland home, consists of a group of 18 historians representing 10 states. They all share a common interest in preserving the memory of Cody and the type of America he tried to preserve.

Fletcher grew up in North Platte, Nebraska ranch country along the Oregon Trail. His boyhood was spent listening to tales about Indians and Cody, who spent his life traveling the world with his Wild West Show.

"Cody didn't like the term show. He called them exhibitions because that's what they were — exhibitions of the West he loved and didn't want to lose. I have a lot of sympathy for him. I grew up riding horses and herding cattle. I loved that life, too," Fletcher said.

Cody helped transport a sample of the old West to probably millions of people, he said.

The Backtrailing project involves the visiting of 60 state capitals and exchanging of Cody memorabilia.

Fletcher wants to help retrace Cody's life between 1883 and 1916 when he took his "Buffalo Bill's Wild West" on the road.

The show included demonstrations of buffalo hunting, shooting and recreations of Custer's Last Stand.

Eventually, Fletcher said, he hopes to put all the artifacts, photos and historical information he has gathered about Cody into a book.

"But I have a long way to go," he said.

Good reputation leads to too many pets for PAWS

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A reputation for keeping animals alive has overcrowded Upland's pet adoption agency to the point that it must consider putting some to sleep.

Only two dogs have been killed because of lack of space in the five months since the shelter opened, said Joy Harvey, president of Promote Animal Welfare and Safety.

But that number will go up immediately if stray dogs coming in don't decrease and the number of adoptions don't increase, she said.

"If it isn't today, it'll be next week," she said of the impending deaths. "We're trying to get around it, but we're going to have to put some down."

Last week the shelter narrowly avoided putting several dogs to sleep by sending them to a foster home. But such resources are limited, Harvey said.

"What they're doing, obviously, is people are either dumping them in Upland or people are calling more often when they see a stray thinking, 'Oh well, PAWS is up there now. They won't go down,'" she said.

"We're adopting out 100 pets a month, but now that doesn't seem to be enough," said Lori Howard, secretary-treasurer for the group. "There seems to be an attitude underfoot that because PAWS is there, that's the answer to the unwanted pet problem."

The shelter shares quarters with the city's Animal Control department at 860 E. 15th St. The city-sponsored animal control office takes only strays from within city limits. After a waiting period, unclaimed dogs and cats are transferred to the PAWS half of the building for adoption, Harvey explained.

"When our cages are full there are only two options," said Howard. "We either euthanize some of our pets or we refuse pets from Upland Animal Control and then they euthanize them — and that's a hard choice for an animal lover to make."

Part of the problem is that residents of Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario either bring their unwanted pets into the shelter and lie, saying they found the animals in Upland, or they simply dump them within the Upland city limits, the volunteers said.

Both neighboring cities contract with the county and the nearest shelter for them is in Devore — too long a drive for most people, Harvey said.

The city's animal caretaker, Arlene Lightbody, said having too many animals always was a problem at the tiny former shelter. She said this increase is probably a combination of dumping and the inevitable build-up of animals.

While no cats have been put to sleep yet, Harvey said it is only a matter of time — after "kitten season" begins in the next couple of months — before they, too, become a problem.

Since many of the shelter's animals are unclaimed pets, Howard said Upland owners should check immediately with the shelter when their pets are missing.

She also suggested running a "found" advertisement in a local newspaper and getting identification tags — even for indoor pets — in case they escape.

Exodus will be lecture subject

Chapters 32 through 34 of the Biblical book of Exodus will be the subject of a lecture Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at The Claremont Graduate School.

Professor Dawn Waring of Cal State, Long Beach, will deliver the lecture in the board room of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity, 831 N. Dartmouth Ave.

While the majority of contemporary scholars have viewed chapters 32-34 of Exodus as having little or no unity, Waring will show how they form a meaningful whole.

The lecture is part of the institute's continuing education program, which offers members and the public the opportunity to learn about cultural and religious aspects of the ancient Mediterranean world. While lectures are free for institute members, general admission to each event is $6 for non-members and $2 for students.

For more information, call the institute at 621-8066.
